Websites and data tools for tribes and Native corporations

01 What I build

- Websites: a clear, phone-friendly site for a tribal office or a village or regional corporation: who you are, programs and services, notices, and how to reach the right person.
- Grant application help: help reading the notice, planning the work and writing the application alongside your staff. The fee is for the work. Nobody can promise an award.
- Data and dashboard tools: tools that pull the numbers you track into one place, like the contract and grant tracking behind ANCWin. Quoted after a short call.
- Tribal grant alerts, free: federal grants open to tribes, sorted by program, with a weekly email at ancwin.com/grants.

02 Prices

- Tribal grant alerts: Free
- Grant application help: $1,500–$3,500 flat for a village tribal office; from $5,000 for corporations
- Website build: $3,500–$7,500 for a village tribe;
- $10,000–$25,000 for a village or regional corporation
- Care plan (hosting, updates and a yearly refresh): $150–$300 a month; from $500 a month for corporations

03 How pricing works

- Fixed quote in writing after a short call, before any work starts.
- No percentage-of-award fees, ever.
- Application help and build work are quoted as separate engagements.

04 Who you'd work with

I'm Peter Ewan, an Ahtna shareholder. I build and run ANCWin, the contract and grant tracker for Alaska Native corporations and tribes, and I have worked on proposals and marketing for an ANC subsidiary.
